Reflection for the Fifth Sunday in Ordinary Time (Year B)

He lifts us up

Christ continues his preaching and healing ministries by healing Simon's mother-in-law who was down with a fever. He also healed others who came to him with their problems. In our worship today, we come to Christ who can set us free from our problems and support us in our trials.

The Lamentations of the Afflicted Job: The life of Job succinctly symbolises the experiences of humanity. In other words, Job represents suffering humanity who has known pain and sorrow. These pains could be physical when we are unable to move about as we would love to because of ill health or old age. In this case, we remember Job who was afflicted with a skin disease (Job 2:7). The pain could also be emotional when we are lonely because we feel deserted and betrayed by our most trusted friends and allies. Job had three friends who did not understand with his situation but judged him harshly. Part of our emotional pain may also arise from bereavement. We might have lost a loved one in their prime. Death might have taken away our only companion from us. These occasions of bereavement have left a vast void in our hearts and we wonder if life would ever get better. Once again, we take consolation in the life of Job who also lost his children in their youth. It was based on these intensively sorrowful experiences that Job voiced out his pain to the Lord. Like Job, we also regularly reflect on the many problems we have faced in life. We ask ourselves why that should be the case. In our reflection on life's troubles, St Paul assures us that God is aware of every trouble humanity encounters (Rom 8:20).

Christ Heals Humanity: While the problems which humanity faces are numerous, Christ the Lord comes with his powerful touch to heal humanity not just from physical afflictions but also from emotional and spiritual ones. In his reflection, Job asked a lot of questions on why humans suffer pain and sorrow. By healing Simon's mother-in-law, Christ answers Job's questions by giving hope to humanity in its despair. He assures humanity that his healing touch will always be there to comfort her. In the fever felt by Simon's mother-in-law, we see the helplessness of humanity.

Before the coming of Christ, humanity was weighed down by the fever of sin. In Simon's mother-in-law, we see humanity who needed help from the Saviour. As Christ went to her house to heal her, Christ also comes to humanity when he took on himself our human nature. It is also significant that in the process of healing her, Christ took her by the hand and helped her up. This speaks of the healing touch of Jesus who comes to us to feel our pain.

In addition, it is known that fever is usually accompanied by high temperature. The most basic method of confirming how high a patient's body temperature is by feeling their body with one's touch. Thus, with his touch, Christ was able to feel Simon's mother-in-law's fever. Similarly, Christ comes to us in our pain and sorrow to relieve us and lift us up. The healing touch of Christ in the world also assures us that he is always close to us. He never leaves our side. He has come to give healing and salvation to humanity.

God restores all things in Christ: Despite all the sufferings he endured, Job remained steadfast and was faithful to God. As his reward, God restored all that he lost during his trial and even blessed him measure. In Christ, God has also restored all things to himself. The Gospel Reading also confirms that Christ's mission is to bring all peoples to the kingdom of God through his preaching and healing ministries (Mk 1:15).

Christ Heals through the Prayer of the Church: After Christ had healed those who were sick in various forms, he withdrew to a lonely place to pray. With this, he teaches his apostles that it is essential to find time to pray after carrying out the ministries of preaching and healing. The Church has learnt from this by always presenting petitions to God for the Church and for the world. Just like St Paul in the Second Reading, the ministers of Christ have the responsibility of devoting themselves fully to the preaching ministry. No matter the form of pain we are going through, Christ heals us and frees us from them all. May we feel the healing touch of Christ whenever we face life's challenges. Amen.
